

SUMMARY OF ALEKSANDRA GURYNOW-PULKOWSKA'S DISSERTATION
“PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES EMPLOYED ON THE BASIS OF ATYPICAL LABOUR RELATIONSHIPS”

The subject of the dissertation is the issue of protection of atypical employees. The following areas of protection of atypical employees were distinguished: working and pay conditions, stability of the employment relationship, collective rights and preventing the abuse of atypical employment.

The first chapter contains the definition of atypical labour relationship and the development of this form of employment.

The second chapter presents the issue-based approach to the working and pay conditions of atypical employees in comparison with the protection of this matter that workers have enjoyed under a standard employment relationship.

The third chapter focuses on the protection of stability of the atypical employment relationship, the situation of atypical employees in the event of collective redundancies and claims for defective termination of an employment contract.

The fourth chapter is about the legal measures aimed at preventing the abuse of atypical employment.

The fifth chapter presents the issue of the collective rights of atypical employees.

The conclusions summarise the legal situation of atypical employees in each aspect of the employment relationship and offer the lege ferenda postulates.